Damage by fire is especially destructive and in the main very apparent. However, there is often damage which is not so obvious. During a fire there will be products of combustion which will pollute and contaminate. A common example of such damage is where PVC affected by fire, releases toxic fumes which condense to form hydrochloride acid. This unseen peril, if not dealt with immediately goes on to attack exposed metal and electronic circuit boards which becomes apparent at some later time.

Immediately after the occurrence of a fire the property owner may not be of a state of mind or have the expertise to identify the full extent of damage. As a result the early appointment of professional assistance is essential if the correct response to the damage is to be implemented, the full extent of the claim identified and the claim resolutely negotiated.

At EAP Envoy our professional surveyors, structural engineers, claims consultants and rapid response recovery team will provide complete assistance, at a time, when it is so essential to have help that can be relied upon.
